Washington Court House

Electric Aggregation

Recently, residents of Washington Court House received a letter from Energy Harbor with the logo of the City of Washington Court House on the letterhead. The letter advised residents that the price per kilowatt hour (kWh) for electric was falling to $4.81. This is the Electric Aggregation Program of the City of Washington Court House approved by local voters in November of 2011.

Fayette County commenced a substantially identical electric aggregation program at a date later than the City of Washington Court House's electric aggregation program. The electric supplier of the Fayette County program is also Energy Harbor and the rate is also $4.81 per kWh. Therefore, residents of Fayette County outside of the City of Washington Court House would have received a similar letter at about the same time as residents of Washington Court House.

Dayton Power and Light (DP&L) remains your electric utility. You will continue to be billed by DP&L. You will continue to receive your familiar electric bill. DP&L will bill for maintaining the power lines and Energy Harbor's charges for supplying the actual electric. All electric bill charges will appear on the same bill.

If you wish to participate in the program or wish to remain in the program, you don't do anything. Enrollment should proceed automatically. You may opt-out of the program by completing and returning the attached form on the letter. At a later date, if you decide that you don't like the electric aggregation program, you can leave the program. No early termination fee exists.

If you don't recall receiving the letter or have discarded the letter and want to review the letter in its entirety; the letter is posted on the website of the City of Washington Court House, WWW.CITYOFWCH.COM. The City of Washington Court House receives no compensation for your participation in the City's electric aggregation program. The City of Washington Court House provides the electric aggregation program so that people can get a reasonable electric rate and not have to decipher a multitude of electric offers.
